At 07.30 yesterday, business was quiet at Clara's diner. Only two tables were occupied. Behind the counter, a short man called Bruno was making breakfast. Suddenly the police entered and led Bruno to the waiting police car. Mr Kramer, the only customer at the counter, grabbed an apron and started turning his eggs and buttering his toast. The two women came to the counter to pay and soon new customers arrived. Then the elderly gentlemen asked for their check, and at 08.30 Mr Kramer had his hands full. He is now thinking about taking out a help-wanted ad in the paper to hire someone.

 Ellie Chapman is a spender. She spends money on topping up her phone, for example. She is always worrying about money, she never seems to get enough. At weekends, she helps out at a grocer’s but there’s more money going out than coming in.

Ed Casswell is a saver. He only pays for himself when he is going out. He often thinks about money and he checks his account to see how much money he has got. He saves to go backpacking after finishing school and his parents pay for all the necessary stuff and also his phone bills.

Hannah Ripley is a spender. She spends money on scarves and make-up, etc. Money is not important to Hannah because her Dad gives her what she needs.

Joshua Tillett is a spender. When he sees something that he wants, he buys it. He has bought a guitar tuner and fake Rolex watches, but he should have been saving to buy a new keyboard.

Rohini Kiran is neither a saver nor a spender. She never has to deny herself anything and money is not a problem to her because she has got a fixed income.

I wake up early that morning feeling excited to go to school wearing new clogs. I can hear people going to work in their clogs. Mum is excited too. She only has a quick breakfast and her hands tremble. She has cut up her best dress to make my new suit. I am sure she thinks the headmaster will admire it and show more interest in me. I am as excited as Mum. Now, I am trembling and I just have to touch the clogs before putting them on. We are both a little frightened when we get close to the school. It is very quiet inside. Well, until we enter, that is, me with my clogs clumping. The headmaster is furious and throws us out. He says he won't accept a pupil wearing clogs that will scratch the floors. Mum is badly hurt. She is struggling to keep back her tears and her lips are compressed. As we come outside she even forgets to put up the umbrella to protect us from the rain.

While he is waiting for the water to boil he sings a song to his sleeping roll, which he calls Matilda.

Suddenly, a sheep appears. The farm worker catches it and hides it in his bag. Then the landowner turns up, accompanied by three policemen, asking about the sheep. The worker is scared and jumps into the waterhole and drowns.

When you pass the waterhole you may still hear the ghost of the farm worker singing to Matilda, his sleeping roll.

Lindy Chamberlain released from prison – New evidence found

Lindy Chamberlain was released from prison yesterday. In October 1982, she had been found guilty of the murder of her baby daughter. Police had been searching for a British tourist who had fallen to his death from Uluru in an area full of dingolairs when suddenly they found the missing piece of evidence from the Chamberlain case – the baby daughter Azaria’s missing jacket.

Five and a half years ago, on August 17, 1980, the Chamberlains spent their holiday at a campsite near Uluru. Suddenly their baby Azaria disappeared and the parents were sure a dingo had taken her.

The husband, Michael, was serving as minister in a Seventh Day Adventist Church at the time, and soon there were rumours that the name Azaria meant sacrifice in the wilderness and that Lindy, the mother, had killed her own daughter.

After the police had examined the campsite they were convinced that Lindy was guilty of murder.

During the trial in September 1982, the police testified that they had found the baby’s blood in the car, that the rips in her clothes had been made by scissors – not by a dingo – and an expert had found a bloody human handprint on the clothes.

On October 29, the jury found Lindy guilty of murder and she was sentenced to life imprisonment with hard labour.

Yesterday, however, after nearly three and a half years in prison Lindy was released, thanks to the police finding Azaria’s jacket.

Mayra Walsh works as an alligator trapper. She lives in Florida. She loves her job and thinks that it is exciting. Her job makes the customers happy and safe. But it is a tricky job and it is sometimes boring because she is not always successful. She catches around 300 alligators every year and she earns around $ 90,000 a year.

Celia Frost is a Foley artist. She makes sound effects for film and TV. She lives in Hollywood. Her job is interesting and never boring but there is sometimes a lot of stress. She thinks that her pay is OK but she is not paid like the film stars. She says that in a film nothing is real and her job is to make it sound real.

Neal Chapman is a window cleaner. He cleans windows on very high buildings. He lives in Toronto, Canada. He likes to be above the smells and sounds of the big city. The wind and the peregrines are the greatest danger. He works on a narrow platform and sometimes the peregrines attack him.

I was reading an article in a magazine about the dangers of forest fires in Australia and the problems with radioactive waste in our country. My brother came into the room and turned on the TV. He sat down and began (started) watching a programme about poaching in Africa.

After a while I was watching the programme too. They said (were saying) that many wild animals, for example the rhino, were disappearing. They were also talking about

(They also talked about) how climate change could cause severe drought in some countries in Africa and floods in others. When Dad came home from work we helped him make dinner. Dad made rice but my brother said that it wasn't an eco-friendly brand.

When we were finishing our meal, Mum phoned us from Alaska telling us that there was a huge oil spill off the coast where she was now working building (constructing) a wind park.

One day, when my friend Sal is working at a downtown restaurant, he has a very abusive customer. The customer keeps sending back his hamburger saying it tastes bland.

On the burger's third return trip Sal and the cook decide to play floor hockey with the man's meat. Using greasy brooms as hockey sticks, they pass the charbroiled puck around the filthy kitchen floor for several minutes. I think the goal post is a dustbin. They hose off the burger in the sink, throw some heat on it, and bring it to the table.

The abusive customer tastes it and pronounces, "Now it's good."

Kunder kan verkligen vara en plåga. Jag kan ta klagomål på mat och service – det är en del av jobbet. Men när kunder ger sig på en personligen, måste jag erkänna att jag är frestad att slå tillbaka.

Många av mina kunder har så många personliga problem att de har svårt att uppföra sig bland folk. De ser oss kypare som sina tjänare och tror att det är ofarligt att skrika åt (på) oss. Vi blir deras terapeuter eller slagpåsar.

Jag har haft folk som kallat mig nolla och skitstövel rakt i ansiktet. Hur skulle du reagera om någon på jobbet sa så till dig? När det händer, så se upp. Hämnden är nära.
